

7-1-1977

Front Matter

Elephant Editors

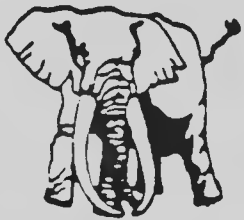

Follow this and additional works at: <http://digitalcommons.wayne.edu/elephant>

---

Recommended Citation

Editors, Elephant (1977) "Front Matter," Elephant: Vol. 1 : Iss. 1 , Article 1.
Available at: <http://digitalcommons.wayne.edu/elephant/vol1/iss1/1>

This Front Matter is brought to you for free and open access by the Open Access Journals at DigitalCommons@WayneState. It has been accepted for inclusion in Elephant by an authorized editor of DigitalCommons@WayneState.

Ahmed remains the symbol...*

This representation of the legendary Ahmed was drawn by O'Neill Ratigan. The drawing was inspired from slides of Ahmed taken at Marsabit, North Kenya, by Jeheskel (Hezy) Shoshani in June of 1973 and incorporated with other reference material.

*Why was Ahmed (and no other elephant) chosen for the cover?

Ahmed, Kenya's most celebrated elephant, was and still is regarded as a national monument. In his time, he had the largest tusks of any known elephant. Each one of his tusks weighed about 148 lbs., approximately 67 kilograms. (Average tusk weight is about 70 lbs. and 100 lbs. is considered large). A world-wide protest to save Ahmed's life was ignited by a report that two American hunters were after his huge ivory. This protest included more than 5,000 letters and cards delivered to the East African Wild Life Society. Thereafter, Ahmed was totally protected from human harassment:

- 1) by the mere fact that he was in a protected park - Marsabit.
- 2) by a Decree from the president of Kenya, Mzee Jomo Kenyata.
- 3) by daily monitoring his movements - a task performed by two askaris (soldiers).
- 4) by "the close proximity of two younger bulls = elephant askaris."

This last statement is a thought or perhaps a legend rather than an observation.

In the Presidential Decree, Jomo Kenyata described Ahmed as "...this individual animal which captures the imagination and concern of all mankind." It was further stated in the Decree that "...under no circumstances may be (Ahmed) hunted or harassed by anyone."

Early in 1974 Ahmed died at about 55 years old (average lifespan is equal to that of man). The death was "natural", i.e., he was not the victim of the murderous "Ivory Rush" as it was initially feared. Presently, Ahmed is preserved in the National Museum of Nairobi, Kenya - the great elephant remains the symbol of conservation for this and future generations.

C O N T E N T S

Cover - Ahmed. See captions opposite.

	Page
A note from the editor	1
Meeting of June 21, 1977	2
Excerpts selected from the survey of North American zoos	6
Captive elephant population of North America	7
 New Business
Recent correspondence	7
Requests	8
Miscellaneous comments	8
Preliminary mailing list	10
Selected recent literature on elephants	15
Questionnaire	18