4-1-1999

Contributors

Marvels & Tales Editor

Recommended Citation

Ruth B. Bottigheimer teaches in the Department of Comparative Literature at the State University of New York, Stony Brook. She has published a number of books and articles on fairy tales, children's literature, and illustrations.

Eric C. Brown is Assistant Professor of English at the University of Southwestern Louisiana. He has recently published essays on Shakespeare, Coleridge, Melville, and T. S. Eliot, and currently is completing a book on performance and time in early modern drama.

Stephen Canham teaches at the University of Hawaii, Mānoa. He has published on children's and adult book illustration, and in the early 1980s he helped to found the Literature and Hawai'i's Children Conference series.

Isabel Cardigos received her PhD from King's College London and her book, In and Out of Enchantment, was published in the Folklore Fellows Communications series. She teaches at the University of the Algarve, where she cofounded the Centro de Estudos Ataide Oliveira, a center of oral literature studies, and she edits the journal Estudos de Literatura Oral.

Thomas E. Dillingham teaches British romantic literature, mythology, and folklore at Stephens College in Columbia, Missouri. He has published articles and reviews on Christopher Smart, William Blake, and many contemporary poets.

Mary Louise Ennis received her PhD from Yale University and has taught French Literature at Wesleyan University since 1991. She is a contributor to the Oxford Companion to Fairy Tales, and has elsewhere written on parody, gardens, and forbidden books. She is currently editing her manuscript (The Voyage to Cythera: From Allegory to Erotica in Eighteenth-Century France) and preparing an Internet-based course called “The Painter and French Fiction.”
CONTRIBUTORS

Tanita Ey is a graduate student in German studies at Wayne State University.

Marcia Gaudet is Professor of English and Coordinator of Graduate Studies at the University of Southwestern Louisiana. She is the coauthor of Porch Talk with Ernest Gaines, and her folklore publications include articles in Journal of American Folklore, Fabula, and Western Folklore.

Galit Hasan-Rokem is a Professor of Hebrew Literature and of Jewish and Comparative Folklore at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. She has published on folk-narrative theory, proverbs, and folklore in Hebrew literature. Her book on folklore in the Hebrew literature of Late Antiquity is forthcoming in English with Stanford University Press.

Suzanne Kosanke has taught literature and composition at the University of Hawai‘i since 1989. Although her academic focus on fairy tales began with a course on postmodernism in 1987, her general interest stems from a Minnesota childhood filled with stories. Other interests include playing Indonesian gamelan and ukulele (though not together), graphic design, origami and photography.

Kimberly J. Lau is an Assistant Professor in English and Women’s Studies at the University of Utah. Her most recent work concerns popular discourses of alternative health and their relationship to the politics of consumption.

Dennis F. Mahoney is a Professor of German at the University of Vermont. His research interests include German Romantic literature, especially the writings of Novalis. His most recent book, The Critical Fortunes of a Romantic Novel: Novalis’s “Heinrich von Ofterdingen” was selected by the review journal Choice as one of its Outstanding Academic Books for 1995.

William Bernard McCarthy, a member of the Penn State English Department, teaches at the DuBois Campus. He is the author of The Ballad Matrix and Jack in Two Worlds, and is currently editing an anthology that will represent the European folktale repertoire as collected in the United States in the last hundred years.

Robert Viking O’Brien was codirector of a provincial adult education program in the Solomon Islands from 1987 to 1989. Since receiving his PhD from the University of Chicago in 1992, he has taught English and American literature at California State University, Chico, and, as a Fulbright Scholar, at Lórand Eötvös University and József Eötvös University College in Budapest, Hungary. He has published several translations and retellings of Melanesian folktales, as well as scholarly articles on Renaissance literature, literary theory, postcolonial novels, twentieth-century autobiography, and travel writing. He recently completed a memoir of the years that he and his wife lived in the Solomon Islands.

Sanjay Sircar wrote the first thesis in children's literature/fantasy fiction to be accepted within the discipline of English in Australia, and his doctoral work focused on women's metafictive fairy tales. He works in the Australian Commonwealth Public Service and is an independent scholar who writes on marginalized literary traditions.

Brian E. Szumsky is a part-time instructor of composition at Robert Morris College in Chicago, Illinois.

Mechthild Weß studied folklore and German philology at the universities of Gießen and Göttingen, and worked at the Volkskunde institute in Göttingen from 1985 to 1995. Having also trained as a multimedia-designer, she is currently an editorial assistant for the atelier niedernjesa, Verlag Hartmut Bremer. Her research focuses on (e)migration and on identity and mentality.