OBJECTIVES

Editorial Policy. The objective of The Journal of Transportation Management is to report and disseminate new information and new techniques to improve and advance the management of transportation. Articles in The Journal of Transportation Management are of interest to both transportation practitioners and academics. As such, they report topics relevant to the practice of transportation as a profession, to professionals.

Articles relating to carrier management, modal and intermodal transportation of goods and people in both the domestic and international areas are accepted. Topics from allied areas such as public policy, logistics, purchasing and distribution are also acceptable if they are specifically related to the objective stated above. Because articles are to have a real-world orientation, those which are theoretical in content with no application for practitioners are inappropriate for The Journal of Transportation Management.
